HONGKONG, JANUARY 31, 1868.

It is a very common saying that an Englishman loves fair play, and, by force of repeatedly bestowing this commendation on ourselves, we have come to believe it very religiously, and to suppose that Englishmen not only love fair play, but also play fairly in all the relations of life. Anyone who has stopped to consider how much is really included in the idea of fair play, will perhaps find himself seized with certain doubts as to whether or not, after all, the mass of people around him are conspicuous for that characteristic. Fair play is based upon two ordinances (not of Hongkong, but of pure morality), one of which enjoins people to do as they would be done by, and the other to hold fast by that which is good. Fair play, which seems such a commonplace thing when called by its common name, becomes the very essence of that "Religion in Common Life" spoken of in Mr. CAIRD's famous sermon, when it is analysed into its component parts. It is a greater thing than justice, because it includes justice, and a great many other things as well, of which justice can hardly take any notice. It is the practical justice of every day, guided and controlled by honour. In order to love fair play, and, in truth, to play fairly, a man must have a sweet and equable temper, a power of discriminating in difficult cases between justice and injustice, so keen as to be almost a sixth sense, a delicate sympathy with all kinds of suffering, and even a self-denying spirit. This last qualification does not seem to be necessary at the first glance, because the notion of fair play does not include the idea that the person playing fairly towards others shall be unfair in any way towards himself, but in practice there can be no doubt at all that people who are primarily anxious for fair play on their own account will make mistakes now and again, and, to be sure that they are treated quite fairly, will unconsciously cross the boundary-line, and be unfair to others.

We want to insist in the beginning on the sublimity and divine character of fair play, in order that we may not seem to be saying more than we mean in reference to particular ways in which people play unfairly, as a rule, in the world. Perfectly fair play is no more to be expected than perfect beauty in women, or a perfect ratio between the diameter and the circumference of a circle; but, in truth, the kind of play which goes on, as a rule, is woefully far from being fair. A rough kind of fair play is customary in business between persons of equal strength, because each person fights so lustily for himself that it is not very well possible to treat him unfairly, unless he meets someone stronger than himself, indeed, when he is very often treated unfairly enough. For instance, when a great firm or company, or even a single wealthy individual, makes a sacrifice either in selling at very low, or buying at very high rates to drive away competitors, there is very little true fair play about such a proceeding. All operations which depend for the success not upon the satisfaction of a demand, but upon the rise and fall of markets, as indicated by exclusive information, are on the border land between fair and unfair play, and in proportion as their success is most certain beforehand or signal afterwards, so probably do they recede furthest from the regions of truly fair play. The ethics of commerce, however, are too extensive and complicated to be treated in this way merely for the sake of illustrating something else, and mercantile fair play was not the department of which we were about more especially to speak. We wished to point out how that department of life which ought to be the arena of particularly fair play, is in fact, the scene what is perhaps the unfairest play going on in the world. In courts of justice, great and small, in and out of Hongkong, outrages upon fair play are of continual occurrence. In fact, there is hardly such a thing in criminal jurisprudence as fair play at all. Curiously enough the unfairness with which crime is treated has been a remarkable phenomenon in the world from the beginning of its history. The eye for an eye system is of course transparently and childishly unfair as some eyes are so much more valuable that others. For instance, to a man with only one, the remaining organ is much important than either the right or the left alone can be to the rich possessor of two. In the progress of time, however, the idea of revenge was partially eliminated from that of justice, and laws were constructed on the deterring theory. Punishment ceased to be vengeance, and became simply a means of protecting society. This of course was only after mankind had passed through some thousand years of frightful physical suffering in punishment, idiotically misdirected, and of mental suffering—if the victims of torture, ordeals, and so forth, had any sense of fair play at all,—which it is still more painful to think of. We have reached a comparatively clearer atmosphere in the present age, but there has hardly been any attempt to reconcile punishments with fair play by reducing them to scale. If a man picks a pocket, society has a moral right to,—in order to treat the subject abstractedly, let us say,—to give him beans, but it has no right to inflict on him the acute mental suffering involved in the perception of the fact, if this should be the case, that he has not had fair play. He will feel that he has not had fair play, if he sees someone else, who has done something more injurious to society than picking pockets even, served with a smaller share of beans than have been meted out to him. It must be remembered that many people, with a very dull sense of fair play, as a rule will have their sixth sense marvellously quickened, when they come to suffer from unfair play, and it is probable that all convicted prisoners, having their attention strongly directed to subjects of the kind, become acutely perceptive of the hap-hazard way in which the interests of their class are treated. All people who take an interest in criminal law, will have noticed in England how some judges deal in a vindictive spirit, so to speak, with particular offences, against which they have a strong prejudice, while they let off, with light sentences, criminals guilty of other sorts of sins. These meanwhile are the bêtes noirs of other judges, and it thus comes to pass that an offender is punished, not according to the deed he has done, but according to the accident which brings him before one or the other judge. This is a hideous outrage on fair play, and if Englishmen really loved fair play, or could, as a rule, distinguish between it and the reverse, such a shocking phenomenon would rouse more indignation than—a £10 franchise. In the smaller affairs of our own colony there is a disregard of fair play in the distribution of punishments, which cannot but be very painful to all people endowed with the sixth sense. We will not, at the end of this article, go into a discussion of particular cases. We have been dealing with abstract ideas all through, and will leave off without descending to details. A clear perception of the abstract principles of fair play, amongst a whole community, would do much towards making any definite departure from its noble rules improbable. That sixth sense is one of the highest mental faculties which men can possess, and assiduous cultivation thereof a primary consideration with us all.

Police Intelligence, January 30th.

BEFORE C. MAY, ESQ.

There were a large number of small cases this morning, of a very uninteresting nature, and which were disposed of as usual by the infliction of small fines. Inspector Albert brought up five men and two women whom he had arrested out of a crowd of about two hundred, who were having a big fight at about eight o'clock this morning in Tank-lane. The inspector believed it was a faction fight between street and chair-coolies, and having received information that it was about coming off, he accordingly proceeded to the spot with a party of constables and arrested the prisoners. The women were going in as well as the men, pulling each others hair, scratching, &c., the fifth prisoner was covered with blood from a cut he had received on the crown of his head from a bamboo. Prisoners all told lies and contradicted each other, so that there could be no doubt that they had been all engaged in this disturbance, and they were consequently fined ten shillings each, and ordered to find security in $25 each to keep the peace for three months.

Chun-a-to, a hawker, residing in East-street, charged two other individuals with insisting upon entering his house, under the pretence that it was a brothel, which it was not, assaulting him and his wife, and breaking down sundry partitions. Prisoners both insisted that their original statement was correct, the house was a brothel, and the woman whom complainant called as a witness, saying she was his wife, was one of the inmates, but in spite of this assertion, His Worship fined them $5 each, and $2 50 for the damage done to complainant's house and furniture, or in default twenty-one days imprisonment. Both the inspectors of nuisances had also an immense number of summonses, the accumulation of the last five or six days, and which were dealt with in the usual manner.

A BROTHEL ROW.

Lum-a-chun, shop-coolie, was charged with cutting and wounding Ho-he-choy, inmate of a licensed brothel in Square-street, Taipinshan.

Complainant stated that about one o'clock yesterday afternoon prisoner came to her room to pay her a visit, but having a friend in the next room, she left the prisoner's company for that of her friend. Prisoner became enraged at this and began to smash things up generally, and when requested to pay for what he had broken, he refused. Complainant accordingly seized hold of him, upon which he picked up a long hawker's knife which was lying in the room, and cut her on the left hand. The police were then called, and he was given in custody.

Prisoner had quite another version of the affair; he said that he had engaged the complainant for the day, and about one o'clock she wanted to leave him, but he, wishing to have the full worth of his money, objected to this arrangement, and a quarrel ensued, upon which complainant in trying to take a crockery-ware pillow from him broke it, and cut her hand.

The evidence of the constable however corroborated the fact of prisoner being very violent and breaking down the partition. His Worship therefore fined him 40s., or in default, to be imprisoned for one month, and to pay $1.50 for the damage done. He farther told the prisoner that it was a fortunate thing for him that complainant had no witnesses to her statement about the knife, or his punishment would have been far more severe.

FIRING CRACKERS.

No less than eighteen residents, in various parts of the town, appeared to answer summonses which had been issued against them for firing crackers, on the 26th inst., in contravention to the printed notices pasted about the walls, which only gave permission for that favorite amusement on the 25th, the first day of the Chinese new year. Amongst those so summoned, was Capt. Menzies, who appeared by proxy, in the shape of his boy, and was fined by proxy $2, as were eleven others, who were supposed to be able to pay that amount, while the rest, evidently in less affluent circumstances, were let off by a fine of half that sum. His worship explained to the defendants that they ought not to have taken advantage of the permission granted, which was merely an innovation against existing regulations, allowed for a special occasion, and by such a line of conduct they were in a fair way to prevent the same privilege from being granted at a future time.

SUMMONS FOR ASSAULT.

Edward Hopkins, pantryman on board the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Benares, was summoned for unlawfully assaulting Rosario Francis, captain's servant, on board the same vessel.

It appeared that complainant had been infringing on the precincts of the pantry, where he had no business whatever to go, and defendant had, in giving him a push, accidentally cut his lip, causing it to bleed a few drops. Henry Harvey, saloon waiter, was called as a witness, who corroborated the statement made by defendant, that complainant knocked his hand up, thereby causing the blow, which was really the result of accident; but his Worship deprecated violence of any kind whatever, and thought it would have been better to have appealed to the head of the department, who would then have regulated complainant's conduct. He had no doubt but that complainant had been accidentally hurt, but defendant must pay a fine of fifty cents.

LARCENY FROM A DWELLING.

Lee-a-kong, gatemaker, Shek-ten-tsoey, was charged with entering the house of Mok-a-kee, licensed hawker, situated in Shek-ten-tsoey, and stealing therefrom a jacket, a pair of trousers, and a pair of shoes, altogether valued at $2.50, and afterwards pawning the same, and losing the money in a gambling-house.

Complainant stated that prisoner was his friend, who had been staying with him and a number of other hawkers who lived in the same house for more than ten days. Yesterday complainant and all the other inmates of the house, with the exception of one man and the prisoner, went out, and on his return complainant discovered that prisoner had left. He then missed his clothing, and on making inquiry heard that prisoner had taken it. Afterwards he met prisoner in the street, and asked for the clothes, but prisoner handed him the two pawn-tickets produced and ran away. Complainant pursued, and gave him in charge.

Prisoner said that complainant had offered to lend him some clothes, and he accordingly took them to wear on a visit to another friend, but on the way pawned them and entered a gambling-house, intending to win some money, but unfortunately lost his all.

His Worship was sorry to see that prisoner was such an ass to believe he could make money in a gambling-house, and committed him to gaol for three months' with hard labour, also ordering the pawnbroker to return the clothes to complainant on receipt of the sum actually advanced.

Coroner's Inquests.

An inquest was held yesterday at the Civil Hospital on the body of a European, name unknown, who was picked up in the harbour near Pedder's Wharf, on Wednesday evening last, as previously reported in these columns. The jurymen were Messrs. R. W. Lowndes, Thos. Hart, and Geo. Payne. The body was much swollen, and the face considerably discoloured.

P. C. 33, Martin, gave evidence as to finding the body, and Inspector Daly stated that he had endeavoured to get it identified by sending the inhabitants of all the public-houses and boarding-houses in town down to view it, and had also sent boats round to all the vessels in harbour to enquire if any one was missing, but no satisfactory result was obtained, no one was reported missing. A cotton pocket handkerchief and a pair of spectacles were found in the pockets of deceased.

The inquiry was here adjourned to Thursday, February 13th, in order to give the police an opportunity of making further inquiries.

A second inquiry was then commenced on the body of the Chinaman, found hung in a pawnshop in Gilman-street, as reported in yesterday's issue of the Daily Press. In this instance also the body had not yet been identified.

Indian P.C. 215, stated that as he was walking in Queen's-road, about 5 o'clock on Wednesday evening, he saw a crowd of Chinese collected round the pawnshop, No. 10, Gilman-street. Thinking something was wrong, he went down the street, and saw the body of deceased, hanging up behind the door. He then went to the gambling-house next door but one, and procured the assistance of the European watchman from that place. On returning to the pawnshop, the European gave witness a knife, with which he cut down the body, and conveyed it in a chair to the Central station. It was quite dead, (rope produced,) The feet of deceased were about a yard from the ground, and the hands hanging by his side.

Charles David Blain, watchman to the gambling house No. 6 Gilman-street, deposed to seeing the body of deceased suspended by the rope produced, the upper end of which was tied to the upper sliding bar of the door. The body was hidden behind the door, the feet being about six inches from the ground. Deceased must have done the act himself, as there was no room but for one person in the place where the body was hanging.

Wong-a-yee, master of the pawnshop, was absent in Wanchi when he received a message saying that a man had hanged himself at the back of his door, but when he returned home the body had been taken away. Saw the body at the dead house, but could not recognise it in anyway, had never seen deceased before, and had no idea why he went to the shop at all.

Choy-a-cheong, assistant accountant in the pawnshop, stated that on Wednesday afternoon, about three o'clock some children made a great noise, and ran out into the street crying out that a man was hanging behind the door. Witness immediately went to look, and saw deceased with a rope round his neck and quite dead. Witness did not know the man at all, and never noticed him in the pawnshop during the day, or at any other time.

Dr. Cochrane deposed that on examining the body he found a deep mark across the throat, extending from one ear to the other, but no other external marks of violence, and the internal organs were healthy with the exception of the heart and lungs, which were much engorged with blood. He concluded that death had resulted from strangulation.

No less than fourteen pawn tickets were found on the person of deceased, some of them belonging to the shop in which he was found. This inquest was also adjourned by request of Mr. Deane, who watched the case on behalf of the police, in order that if possible the affair might be investigated.

Mr. Locock's Report on Hiogo and Osaka.

Mr. Sidney Locock's report on Hiogo and Osaka, continued from the point at which we broke off yesterday, is as follows:—

The merchant and small traders of Osaka are divided into Guilds, of which there are about 200. These are all registered, and under the supervision of the Governor, though they carry on all their trading operations, with little or no reference to him or his officers. If a merchant wish to join a Guild he has to seek permission from the Guild itself, and having obtained this, he applies to the Machibugio or Governor for registration; this is always granted, unless there be any special reason for refusing, should the Guild on the other hand resist the application of the merchant, the latter can call on the Government officers to inquire into the reasons for the refusal, and should they be found insufficient, the Governor uses his influence to obtain admittance for the applicant. Each Guild is composed of a number of merchants engaged in some one particular branch of business, thus—there may be a Rice Merchant's Guild, a Metal founder's Guild, or a Silk Merchant's Guild. While at Osaka I received an invitation to pay a visit to the Foreign Goods merchant's Guild. I was accompanied by Mr. Satow of the Legation, whose well-nigh perfect knowledge of the Japanese language enabled him to render me great service on this, as well as on other similar occasions while at Osaka. Having been received by the Guild in a body, at the entrance of their hall, we were shown into a room, where we found benches prepared for us in European style, with refreshments laid out on small Japanese tea-poys. The merchants began the interview by handing us their names, written on small long slips of paper, the usual mode in Japan of presenting a card. All the ten merchants of whom the Guild consisted, were present. They told us that the room in which we were sitting was the common room or house of the body, the Guildhall in which they met and consulted together about once a month on all matters affecting the Guild, such as the regulation of prices, the levying of imposts among themselves, the admission of a new member &c., &c. A committee of two meets oftener for the management of smaller matters. They informed us that their Guild was of ancient date, as there was a limited trade in Osaka of foreign goods ever since the time that the Dutch traded at Nagasaki. Their business has increased very much since the arrival of the foreigners eight years ago, but especially during the last year. Though they complained of the late rise of prices, owing to the depreciation of the Ichibu, they stated that this was more than compensated for by the increased and daily increasing desire of the Japanese to obtain foreign articles, in consequence of which, goods are now eagerly bought up almost as soon as landed in Osaka. Until quite recently most of their goods were brought from Nagasaki, but the last year or two a brisk trade has sprung up with Yokohama, from which place they now obtain the larger portion of their supplies. they described the mode of transport to be almost entirely by sea, in native junks, as the freight by land would be too heavy to make the trade remunerative except in very small articles. They told us that the freight on a piece of camlets would be about 4 Boos by land, while by sea it was only 3 Tempos, or one seventh of a Boo, charging the Boo at the Osaka rate of 21 Tempos. Expences on bringing bale goods from Yokohama to Osaka are reckoned at 8 or 10 per cent, including 1 per cent. commission for the purchase and shipment, and interest on outlay at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. This does not provide for insurance, nor was I able to ascertain that any mode of insurance existed. The voyage occupies from 5 to 60 days, it often happening that junks are detained for many days at a time in some harbour or creek, while waiting for a fair wind or a smooth sea. In consequence of the great caution displayed by the Japanese mariner, shipwrecks are not common. During last year not a single junk, in the cargo of which the Guild had an interest, was lost, through three arrived in harbour with damaged goods. One junk has, however, been lost during the present year, and three have arrived with damaged cargoes. I endeavoured to learn what were the actual amounts of their imports during the last eight years, but they assured me that they had no common books of the Guild to which they could refer for such statistics, which could only be obtained by examining the private account books of each member of their Body. I cannot say that the expectation which I expressed of seeing beneficial results to their trade from the opening of Osaka, was fully shared by the Guild; they would be better able to pronounce an opinion on that point a year hence, after the place had been opened—they had their doubts—they looked to their own interests as a Guild, and they were not quite sure that the diminished scope for speculation and the certainty of seeing a portion of their trade pass into the hands of the smaller houses, would be compensated for by the advantages to be derived from its increased proportions.

The following additional information on the present foreign trade, I collected from various sources.

The total number of packages of piece-goods imported last year amounted to 9,800, while there were 740 packages of medicines and 4,900 of miscellaneous goods. The difference between the Yokohama and Osaka prices of foreign goods is reckoned at about 10 per cent. on valuable articles, and goes as high as 20 per cent. on goods of a more bulky description. The lowest actual freight by sea between Yokohama and Osaka is reckoned on the following articles as below, but it is often greater.

On Rice, per koku	Momme	105	= Boos	3.36
„ Oil, per tub	„	45.9	= „	1.48
„ White Sugar, per tub	„	40.5	= „	1.28
„ Sake, „	„	129	= „	4.12
„ Large cases, each,	„	159	= „	4.08
„ Bales, each	„	64.8	= „	2.08

The Momme is here reckoned at the Osaka rate, which at present is about 125 to the rio, the rio being equal to 4 Boos.

No direct import duty is levied by the Government on foreign goods brought from Yokohama, as they are supposed to have already paid duty on their first arrival in the country. A fixed tax or license fee, being, however, payable at the end of each year by the Guilds, the funds required to meet this tax are obtained by a duty varying from 1 to 3 per cent., levied on all goods at the time that they are sold by the members of the Guild, at the Exchange or Market, where the Guilds effect their sales. No transit tax, other than a very small one on entering and leaving a Daimio's territory, is levied on goods brought to the city by land, though small contributions are sometimes demanded towards the maintenance of the roads and bridges, especially if any expensive works of this nature have recently been undertaken.

But little raw silk finds its way into Osaka at present. Lying, as the principal silk districts in these parts do, to the east of the Biwa lake, any surplus remaining over and above the supply of native wants, is conveyed to the foreign market at Yokohama, more quickly and surely by land than by sea. The chief centre for silk weaving would seem to be Kioto, the capital of Japan, situated about thirty miles from Osaka. There can be little doubt that immense quantities of silk must be required for the woven silk fabrics which are manufactured in or collected at Kioto, and are from thence distributed amongst the large cities of Japan. Little silk is woven in Osaka itself, and yet here as at Yedo, the shops at which silks of every description are sold by wholesale or retail, are on a scale which testifies to the quantity of business which must be carried on within them. Generally open on one or two sides to the street, the interior of the shops is only partially concealed by long strips of black cotton cloth, which hang down from the eaves of the roof, forming a kind of waving screen. Within, the eye wanders amongst a crowd of assistants employed in various ways. The older hands squat on the matted floor, and unfold piece after piece of silks, gauzes, crapes or brocades before their customers, while the younger ones are kept well employed in running for the articles called for, and taking away those that are not required. Upstairs are private rooms, to which the more distinguished or more extensive customers are always taken and attended to by the experienced hands, while cups of tea, cakes, and sweetmeats are handed round. In the largest silk shops in Osaka there are as many as 300 persons continually employed.

Some of the most important merchants of Osaka live in the large rectangular block or portion of the city called the Semba. About a mile lower down the river, but still at a distance of three or four miles from the fort at its mouth, is the site selected for the foreign settlement. Here foreigners will, in the terms of the Treaties, be allowed to hire houses and reside for purposes of trade, and here too have the Japanese Government, more liberal than the Treaties, set apart a space hitherto used for Government purposes, within which foreigners may rent land and build, in the same way as at the open ports.

As a foreign place of trade Osaka by itself would be next to valueless. The river is so shallow that vessels cannot possibly ascend it, the bar has never more than three feet of water on it at low tide, and is sometimes, nearly if not wholly dry; the roadstead is about a couple of miles from the bar, and exposed to the southerly and westerly winds. Twelve or fourteen miles, however, to the west of this roadstead, are the towns of Hiogo and Kobé, on the shores of the bays of the same names. In either of these bays, ships of all sizes can find shelter from winds and waves, from which, except when from the south-east they are well sheltered. The bottom being composed of stiff mud or sand affords a capital anchorage, and the water is so deep, that ships of a thousand tons can anchor within a few yards of the shore. It is towards the eastern extremity of the bay of Kobé, the most eastern of the two, that a vacant site still remains which has been selected for the foreign settlement. Though perhaps not quite so sheltered in some winds, as the bay of Hiogo, it has the advantage of an extensive basin, which has been formed by the Japanese Government for docking and other purposes, and which is admirably adapted for landing goods. Kobé has also the advantage of being rather nearer by land than Hiogo to Osaka. The distance from the foreign settlement at Osaka to that at Kobé cannot be much over twenty miles, which is the distance of Yedo from Yokohama.

Coal has within the last ten or twelve years been discovered among the hills, four miles from Hiogo. I had an opportunity while there of visiting the works, if indeed they deserve the name, which have been undertaken for procuring the coal. Here and there, wherever the coal, or shale, which lay over it has been cropping out from the hill's side, a horizontal passage has been run in, never more than twenty-five feet, and often only ten or twelve feet in length. In some of these burrows, two or three men, crouched almost to the ground by reason of the lowness of the roof, were at work picking away at the sides with pointed hammers, and cleaning and sorting each little piece with their hands before throwing it into one heap or another, according to its quality. A few coolies, in the last stage but one of nudity, collect the coal at the mouths of these burrows, and carry it to where the road admits of its being transferred to the backs of bullocks, or to three-wheeled carts holding about half a ton each, and drawn by one animal. In this way it is brought to the Hiogo market. A great portion of the coal which is obtained in the manner above described is of a very inferior description. Here and there, however, good specimens of a kind of Anthracite are brought out from the hill's side, of similar quality to that worked at Takasima, an island lying 7 miles to the south-west of Nagasaki, and which is supplied to our navy there at 8 dollars a ton, though at Hiogo our ships have been asked as much as 28 dollars a ton for it, and have never been able to obtain it under $12.50 per ton. There is no reason, however, why the coal seams at Hiogo should not be worked at a cost far less than at Takasima, where much the same mode of obtaining it is adopted, though on a larger scale. The seam which has been discovered in the hills near Hiogo, and which is about two feet thick, runs down the plain immediately behind Hiogo, at an angle of about fifteen degrees, or very nearly that of the hills themselves. There is therefore good reason to believe that by boring in the plain immediately at the foot of the range, the main seam, of which that now worked in the hills may be but an offshoot, might be discovered. The Japanese Government are not indifferent to the advantages to be derived from a more extensive and scientific working of the coal of Hiogo, and took occasion of the late visit of the Foreign Representatives, to request Mr. Sutton, Chief Engineer of H.M.S. Serpent, which was engaged in surveying the Bay, to visit the coal works in question, and report as to the best means of extending them. It is not improbable that we may ere long see a regular coal mine opened on European principles, and worked by European machinery.

There can be little doubt but that the foreign settlement at Hiogo (Kobé), taken in connection with that at Osaka, will grow into an important trading port. The two are almost essential to each other. Without Hiogo foreign shipping would have no safe anchorage, no means of lading and unlading. Without Osaka, the foreign merchant at Hiogo would find himself exposed to the same drawbacks, the same isolation of which there is so much complaint at Yokohama; cut off from all communication with the Guilds and the large merchants of Osaka, he would have to content himself with transacting business with the go-between dealer of Hiogo, or the mere agent of some city merchant, whom he had never seen, and of whose character, position, and place of abode, he was ignorant.

With Osaka as well as Hiogo, thrown open, with our merchants established almost in the heart of the city, able to receive natives in their own houses, or to go and find them out in theirs, it will be impossible for the officers of the Government to keep up that surveillance, and exercise that interference of which they have been so frequently accused at Yokohama. Some difficulty will doubtless be experienced in the transport of merchandise between Osaka and Hiogo, but it is a difficulty which exists independent of the fact of their being foreign settlements either at one place or the other. It is a difficulty which is felt at the present moment by the Japanese, and has to be overcome by them. Large sea junks arrive daily from distant parts of the Japan, freighted with merchandize for Osaka. This they have to unload into cargo-boats which carry it up the river. Our ships must follow the same plan. It must be an expensive and troublesome one, but it will not place our merchants at a disadvantage as compared with the native trader. Nearly every bale of English cottons now selling in Osaka has been unshipped at Nagasaki or Yokohama, purchased by the native agent, shipped in a junk and transhipped into smaller boats off the Osaka bar. There are various plans that may be adopted by our own shipping in addition to the transmission of the merchandize by land from Hiogo, which would probably be too expensive, except in the case of silk for export, and a few other valuable articles. Suppose the case of the ship arriving at Hiogo consigned to some foreign house. The cargo might either be landed and disposed of to some native merchant, who would then accept the risk of conveying it to Osaka, or it might be landed and placed in the Bonded Warehouses or some private godown, until it should be convenient to send it on to Osaka in cargo boats, or, if the weather were fine and the water smooth, it might be sent over the ship's side into the cargo boats, which would at once take it to Osaka.

I have heard it objected by persons living at Yokohama, that the opening of Hiogo and Osaka will cause greater expenses than it is likely to bring profits, that houses and establishments such as one sees here, are not kept up for nothing, and that, after all, the whole of Japan is not so large but that it can be supplied in foreign goods, and export its own produce through the three ports already opened. But taking for granted that the foreign houses already established at Yokohama are obliged to open branches at every new port that is successively thrown open, whether they can afford it or not, instead of leaving to other new settlers to cull the first fruits at the new ports, the question still remains whether this could not be done in a less expensive manner than has hitherto been the fashion in China and Japan.

A large amount of business can be done in a place like Osaka opened for the first time to trade with very small and modest means; as was remarked to me by a native who dealt in foreign goods, and sold trumpery saddles at £15 a piece, Osaka is such a busy place that a man can live in a little room or shop of ten mats and carry on a thriving trade. A quarter of a million of human beings are congregated in the city, all clothed in cotton, woven at the cottage looms, at a cost superior to that at which we can afford to bring our own goods into the market. Nor is there any prejudice to be overcome; young Japan is eager to throw off its old clothes along with its old restraints. There is already a furore at Osaka for every thing foreign, from a pair of top boots to a widawake hat, from a piece of old window to a bottle of champagne. Bales of Manchester goods are to be seen standing in the doorways of wholesale houses, while smaller shops exclusively devote themselves to the retail of miscellaneous goods of all descriptions. There are at this moment no fewer than forty native photographers established in the city, obtaining their lenses, glass plate and chemicals from Europe, and all of them finding full occupation in every style of photography.

Situated as Osaka is at the extremity of the Saikaido, and within thirty or thirty five miles of Kioto, it must prove to a great extent a focus for the distribution of our merchandize in the interior, where it is at present wholly unknown. It will also doubtless be a focus to which will be attracted some of the surplus silk now grown in the districts bordering on the Biwa lake. The silks of these districts are much prized by the Japanese themselves, and are woven by them at Kioto into the silk called Habutai, which is used in the palace of the Mikado. The Hsama crape and the Omeshi crape are also much esteemed, and are woven from the silks of the neighbouring districts. With a new demand the supply will probably increase. While accompanying the Minister on his tour of inspection to the West coast, I had an opportunity of observing the extent to which the mulberry was cultivated on each side of the Biwa lake, notwithstanding the superiority of the silk produced in those ports. With a new market opened so near their doors it is to be presumed that the peasantry will turn their attention more to the growth of the mulberry. I noticed also that the Uji tea, universally known and appreciated, was grown in the neighbourhood of Osaka; care seemed to be taken in its cultivation, which was conducted in many places under extensive roofs, formed of mats and closed in at the sides, which had the effect of causing the plants to grow to a large size, and produce a greener leaf than they would otherwise do. With a supply of silk and tea for our homeward freights, with a new and extensive market for our own manufactures, and with a supply of fair coal at hand for our steamers, there appears to be no reason why Osaka and Hiogo should not justify the expectations that were formed of them when they were selected by the framers of the first Treaties, to be open ports of Japan.

(Sign.d) SIDNEY LOCOCK.

The Opening of the Ports.

The special correspondent of the Japan Herald writes the following letter on this subject:—

KOBE, HIOGO, Jan. 2, 1868.

Nineteen—twenty—twenty one; there they boom, the cannon of the fleet saluting the "rising sun," the Japanese ensign, which is flying at the mainmast-head of all the men-of-war in harbour.

Thus, notwithstanding the croakings that were heard the day on which we left Yokohama, to the effect that Hiogo and Osaka would not be opened for 100 days, and probably not at all, the opening of the New Ports is "un fait accompli," and we find ourselves on the 1st of January, 1868, with yet another field before us for enterprise and commerce, and, in our humble opinion, a fair field it promises to be.

Various rumours have been current here respecting the influence that the opening of the Ports has had on the magnates of the land, but of this we shall have more knowledge, and consequently be in a better position to touch upon, in the course of the next day or two. Meanwhile, we have much pleasure in writing that all is quiet, and from gentlemen who have thrown out their skirmishing parties—in the shape of intelligent natives and Japanese talking Celestials—on the neighbouring town and villages, we are informed that the prospects of commercial affairs is very promising.

Our Consul, Mr. Myburgh, who hoisted the British flag, at the Temporary Consulate, on the 1st inst., has, we think, not had a very easy time of it, and is importuned, doubtless at all hours of the day, we were going to add—and night, by restless settlers hungry for land, houses, and we should not probably be very far wrong were we further to add, and information as to the commissariat capabilities of the place, his colleague at Osaka, must have, we should imagine, an easy time of it in comparison.

The Japanese are quite willing to lease their houses, at prices, however, which are most exorbitant, and we think that should their extortionate demands increase for the miserable hovels that they offer, a few paternal words of advice from their rulers, governors, pastors, and masters, would do them no harm, and would be of considerable benefit to the foreigners, who landing without home and shelter are obliged to fill (writing figuratively,) the voracious maws of the speculative native, with boos, before they can find a roof to cover them; from what we can hear, there is great reason to believe that the Japanese authorities have been more ready to encourage, than to restrain this feeling; an incident of the last few days will show more fully the state of things in connection with the above remarks. A well known Yokohama resident, landing on the 1st instant, looked with favour on a certain building, enquired the monthly rental, and was told that 400 boos would be the moderate sum required, said premises though somewhat extensive, are but rambling, and the buildings thereon, composed of mud and timber—the age we should be sorry to make even a guess at—the foreign speculator closed with the native speculator at the price named, and took him to the custom house, had the matter arranged by an interpreter, duplicate agreements written, paid a portion of the rent in advance as bargain money, and then considered himself (and justly so) as the spirited and honest owner of "a corner lot." The sequel will show that a rival was already in the field. Our friend vainly endeavoured to obtain possession of the keys, and got but excuses and evasive answers instead. Later in the day he showed the premises to two visitors, to whom he pointed out their capabilities for the business about to be carried on therein. "It is all remarkably convenient," said one of the visitors, "but are you aware that I engaged these premises six weeks ago!" Our foreign speculating friend was aghast, but explanations ensuing, it became evident that the visitor had a certain reason for imagining himself the temporary owner of the property. It appeared that a boy, "well tried and trusty," had been despatched to reconnoitre six weeks ago, who following the instructions of his master, had, on the return of a plan that he had drawn out roughly and forwarded to Yokohama, entered into treaty with a Japanese for the premises in question, at a monthly rental of sixty boos, no documents had been signed nor had there, according to the landlord's statement, any "filthy lucre" passed between them. Thus the matter stood, the one party claimed the premises through an indirect contract entered into prior to the opening of the ports by Treaty, the other had in a regular and legal manner gone through the necessary form required for leasing property, and had received a receipt for a considerable sum of boos on the strength of the transaction. It was perplexing and annoying for both parties, who are gentlemen, straightforward and honourable to a degree, but the question as to the lawful tenant, is self evident, and the speculator at four hundred boos per mensem, has taken possession of the premises. We cite the above merely to show, that in one instance the rental at sixty boos a month to a native, was a few weeks afterwards raised to four hundred boos for the same term to a foreigner, the moderate increase of nearly 700 per cent. being exacted.

We grant that every man is right to make the best use of circumstances to his own benefit, but this case looks so much like a "squeeze."

The British China Squadron is still here, with Admiral Sir Henry Keppel in command, it consists of twelve vessels of war, amongst which is the Iron Clad, Ocean, which is indeed a formidable craft, and would we should imagine make short work of any of the vessels that have hitherto visited these waters. We hear that the squadron will shortly be dispersed, the different ships proceeding to their respective stations, leaving the Iron Clad for the present at Hiogo. Sir Harry Parkes still remains at Osaka, and is, we regret to hear, somewhat indisposed. H. E. M. Leon Roches, who arrived in H. I. M. Laplace accompanied by his suite and a guard of 40 Marines Fusiliers, is now at Hiogo, where is also Mr. Van Valkenburgh the U. S. Minister. Mr. Von Brandt is at Osaka, and Mr. Graeff Von Polsbroek and the other Ministers are at present here. The basin, or "Gemba," is now nearly completed, and will form an excellent landing-place for merchandize. The Custom-house is also nearly finished, but the streets and lots are still unindicated by any landmark or boundary. It would almost be as well if a little of the energy devoted to the construction of the Custom-house were directed to the marking out of the proposed lots, so that intending purchasers may have an opportunity of seeing exactly what they are about to invest in. Experience in land sales at Yokohama point to such an arrangement as desirable. The authorities are expecting enormous prices for the land forming the new settlement; we wish they may get it—perhaps!

Madame Veralli's Concert.

It is satisfactory to see that no words of praise are needed to recommend Mdme. Veralli to the Hongkong public. At her concert last night, the large room of the Portuguese Club was filled to overflowing with an appreciative, we may almost say an enthusiastic audience. It was no slight task for a lady to entertain an audience for a whole evening with only one other artist to help her, but Mdme. Veralli succeeded so well, that the satisfaction of her hearers judging from their applause, grew in intensity as the evening progressed, and only culminated with the last song. The heroine of the evening sang six selections, all choice pieces from the operatic stage, the chief and most splendid of all, perhaps, being the famous "O mio Fernando," from the "Favorita." This elicited an encore, but as all appreciative listeners would gladly have heard every one of the pieces twice over, that is no praise worthy of the occasion. In a place like this, all public entertainments are received with so much good humour that praise seems to lose its meaning. One almost shrinks from applying to the singing of so finished and artistic a musician as Mdme. Veralli, phrases of commendation which have been lost their signification by frequent use. It is not necessary, however, for us to point out that Mdme. Veralli is absolutely, by any standard, and quite apart from the fact that we are hearing her in Hongkong, an accomplished mistress of her art. This is evidently understood thoroughly well, judging from the audience which was assembled at the concert last evening. "Stride la Vampa" was also encored, and the first selection, "Mille volti sul Campo d'onore," derived from a source but little known, we imagine, deserved the honour as much as any of the pieces. Signor Sforzani, who assisted Mdme. Veralli, sang, amongst other things, a grand aria from "Ernani," "Infelici tu credevi," in which he was peculiarly successful. He also is a thoroughly-trained artist.

It is much to be hoped that Madame Veralli will not leave Hongkong without giving some more concerts, and it is gratifying to see, from the character and magnitude of the audience last night, that she will be properly appreciated if she remains here for a time, before returning to Europe.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Thursday Evening.

There has been less business doing to-day in the Drug market, and a few small sales only are reported of Patna at $682½, and Benares at $675 to $676½ on short credit. There are buyers of First Sales Old Patna at $671½, on three weeks' time to arrive, and some operations have been made at $675, with $15 bargain each chest. New has been placed at $677½ on time, and $12½ bargain. The market, however, at close shows slight symptoms of weakness, with more sellers than buyers. In Malwa, a small amount of business has been done at $727½ to $730, of inferior and rejected Drug, with an allowance in weight of one to one and-a-half catties per picul. To-days closing rates are—Patna, $680 to $692½; Benares, $673½ to $676½; and Malwa, $727½ to $730.

There has been a moderate business doing to-day in the general markets, but the inquiry for goods is still exceedingly tame. There have been two sales of Yarn reported, 50 bales Nos. 28-32, half the quantity having been placed at $155.00, and half at $147½, a figure quite below what must be considered the present level of the market, and although the particulars have not transpired it is likely that the lot was either a bad assortment or perhaps slightly damaged. A sale of 300 pieces Camlets is reported at $18.50. The inquiry for Raw Cotton appears to have moderated to-day, and the only sales we hear of embrace 150 bales Bombay Staple at $17.50 to $18.90, the market is very firm and prices tend upwards. The business in Produce has been fair. Sales include 25,000 piculs Saigon Rice at $1.45 to $1.46, 500 bags Brown Sugar at $3.45, 200 piculs Hides at $10.60, 200 piculs Sandalwood at $16.00 and 25 piculs Bees Wax at $108. A sales of 60 piculs Copper Sheathing is reported at $26. There is nothing new to note in the Share or Exchange market, the latter remains easy for purchasers.

Extracts.

Army Interpreters in Abyssinia.

(From the Pall Mall Gazette.)

Mr. Robert Lowe repines and is dissatisfied, because the big new Abyssinian Blue-book, instead of marshalling sets of extracts from old and new travellers in lucid and orderly array, is stuffed full of promiscuous, nay, chaotic, matter about things one is perfectly able to take for granted, or does not care to inquire into; among others, about Dr. Krapf's theological scruples, and the appointments proposed to be given to dragomen : n l eut-ingomen, as he calls them—a term which has an uncomfortable twang of the Ottoman empire and the Eastern question in it. That Blue-book is an astonishing production, no doubt. A good half of it must consist of covering-despatches and acknowledgments of the receipt of despatches, nor is it easy to see by what principle it happened that we have been let off cheaply with these alone, and have not got the directions of the envelopes and the postmarks into the bargain. These things are most provoking, for they render continuous or coherent reading almost out of the question. But if one had to single out any item of almost paramount immediate and practical importance, one would surely select that which concerns the power of mutual intercourse between our army and the people amongst whom we are going to carry civilization and progress. If we cannot speak to them in their own tongue, it is manifest that we cannot give them civilization and progress, except perhaps in minor matters, such as the cooking of raw meat, where example will do as well as precept. We venture to say that the practical question of interpreters, so far from being a superfluous matter, is just one of those which requires as serious a consideration as it is possible to obtain; far more serious a consideration, indeed, than it is likely to get yet awhile from the public, which is usually apathetic about these matters, unless haply theology be blended with them, as in the present case. If we are about to make war after the fashion of Jeoghiz or of the first Napoleon, we can dispense with interpretation. But, so far from that, we are undertaking a war which in all likelihood is to be nothing but interpretation—all groping and no fighting. Our adversary's sole ascertained rule of strategy is to bewilder his enemy's head, not to strike at his body. We shall be driven to see and feel our way as we best can; and without interpreters of the most efficient kind, plenty of them, and guides thoroughly up to the country and the tricks of the country, our army will be no better than a blind man without his dog. We are going to meet six Richmonds in the field instead of one, if ever we are to meet anybody at all in the field. King Theodore's most efficient arsenal, according to all reports, is that which is furnished with doubles of himself, to be used for misleading the enemy on the day of battle. That would not matter much if our quarrel were not so strictly personal to King Theodore himself. Being such, and having such tactics to contend against, it is clear that the importance of all which relates to the efficiency of our secret intelligence department is of primary, not of secondary, importance. Our guides and interpreters will be the eye of the army, without which its hands will be but of little avail.

Amharic is the principal or State language of independent Christian Abyssinia, and it is of Amharic rather than of any other that a knowledge will be wanted by the army. Hardly any Englishmen, we believe, has any practical knowledge of Amharic, unless it be Dr. Beke, or it may be a missionary or so. At any rate none have now come forward and asserted themselves, either in the Blue-book or elsewhere. What Mr. Mansfield Parkyns may know does not appear from his book, but it is fair to assume that he got on quite well enough to take ample care of himself. That, however, is not the same thing as taking care of an army, nor is this occupation exactly the sort of work to which a Nottinghamshire country squire would care to tie himself down in middle age, after he had had his fling in savage countries, and sown the wild oats of travel once for all. It is very strange, by the way, that so well known a traveller cannot get his name rightly spelt by the officials or Blue-book people. They will call him Parkyn; which perhaps put him out of humour, and made him decline to meet Sir Robert Napier's wishes. Neither Englishmen nor laymen, then, appear forthcoming as interpreters, so there seems to have been nothing for it but to fall back upon foreigners and clergymen; and in those cases, saying foreigners is equivalent to saying Germans, for what with patience, industry, and linguistic training, any German is potentially acquainted with any given language. Moreover, there is hardly a language in the known world of which some German or other has not actually made himself master by practical experience. Several Germans, chiefly missionaries, are accordingly well versed in Amharic, of whom Dr. Krapf may be considered the leading survivor. His services have been at once put into requisition by Government, and he has willingly closed with the offer. In so doing he endeavoured to strike a covenant or make a theological bargain for himself with the authorities. That is perfectly natural, seeing that he was engaged in active missionary work for many years in these countries, and that conversion has become the habit of life with him. The precise definition of his employment in regard to missionary enterprise is surely a necessary, not a superfluous, matter. It is one which happens to be much wanted, for a paragraph has been lately going the round of the papers, ascribing to him the project of such an enterprise on a large scale, in company with colporteurs and an unlimited supply of Amharic Bibles; and that paragraph may reasonably occasion uneasiness among many people but for the official definition of Dr. Krapf's duties. If we cannot get him without giving him a little length of missionary tether, one must negotiate about the tether, and must put the result in the Blue-book, Mr. Lowe to the contrary notwithstanding; for on this point the English public is pre-eminently anxious and susceptible. From the Indian side, where the practical bearings of language-questions, being seen in every-day life, are much better realized than at home, the expedition is further supplied with the services of one Dr. Blumhardt, who has drawn up an Amharic-Hindustani and Hindustani-Amharic dialogue-book and dictionary,—an excellent and practical stroke of work. Not having seen this, we cannot pronounce on its merits; but by the description given of it in the announcement of the circumstance, it seems to be really practical in its nature, and not one of those theoretisch-prcktisch grammars in which the German mind delights, and which always make their students fall between two stools. These two men, together with Krapf's companion, Dr. Haussmann, appear to be the only first-class interpreters of the expedition. They will assuredly have their hands full. Where the second-class interpreters are to come from it is not easy to say; the Amharic-speaking Christian Abyssinians having little intercourse with the Arabic-speaking populations by whom they are surrounded on all sides, and Mahometan Arabs, on the other hand, knowing equally little of the prominant speech of Abyssinia, unless it be upon its inferior frontier, of which we know little as regards this particular point. The distribution of the various languages of Abyssinia, as a matter of scientific philology and apart from practical life, forms the subject of a valuable paper by Dr. Beke in the second volume of the "Transactions of the Philological Society," written some five and twenty years ago. Neither this, however, nor any other treatise on the subject that we have seen, gives us any information on a point of the most vital importance—the exact nature and amount of Arab linguistic influence in Abyssinia. How far will Arabic carry one in that country? Is it still used in correspondence, as it once was—to some extent at least? Is it used colloquially by and part of the population? Are the country people wholly and absolutely ignorant of it? Abyssinia, with its many races and tongues of different importance, lies like a many-peaked island in the midst of a great sea of Arabic speech, reproducing the phenomena of the Caucasus, similarly many-tongued in an ocean of uniform speech, once Turkish, to-morrow Russian. Is there any relative encroachment or retirement, gain or loss? Last, and not least, comes the inquiry how far the great Arabic language itself is treated as a vernacular tongue by the educational authorities in India, and, if not so treated, why not? Is there anybody in Western India acquainted with vulgar spoken Arabic at all, except waifs and strays from Aden and the Gulf, or the surviving officers of the late Indian navy, to a man well versed in it, yet versed through experience only and not through teaching? If such there be, why is there, literally, no such thing in the English language as a good or even an indifferent practical handbook to vernacular Arabic—literally none—while the French count them by the score? Two or three books claim to be such, but are curiously worthless and erroneous, except Captain Fletcher Hayes's little book in a sixpenny wrapper; quite unpretending, and good as far as it goes, but much too small for any real use. We suspect the time has come to make a special question of this, and take it in hand forthwith.

EDUCATION IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND.—The Times notices as a curious incident in the debate on education in the House of Lords, that a comparison should be made between England and Ireland to the disadvantage of the former. In Ireland, it seems, you come to a school every two miles, Lord Russell had been told—every three miles, it was safe to say. This must strike every visitor; and he is still more struck when he puts a few questions to almost every lad he meets, even in the most out-of-the-way places. The State, the National Society, the clergy and ministers of the rival communions, and several societies, contend for every child in the island, and the result is only such as might be expected. The Irish are an educated people. This is found in the United States, and it is found here too. They are better grounded in the elements; they are further advanced; and after their own way, they can make more use of their reasoning powers. But the fact is one connected with other facts; it has other lessons besides the lesson Lord Russell would wish to draw from it, viz., that England should do as Ireland does. The circumstances of the two countries cannot be omitted from the account. England is the most industrious country in the world; Ireland is the least industrious of civilized nations. For about half the year its peasants can hardly work if they try, for they can hardly get on the land, so saturated as it is with continually recurring showers. They have little else to do than stand in groups, sharpening their wits on one another, inventing endless histories, and intolerable wrongs. Hence that eloquence, that imagination, and that wit which tell in the school, whatever they come to in after life. The comparison suggested by Lord Russell is full of significance, but it remains to be worked out.
